AFN changing satellites; viewer adjustments required

By George A. Smith
 American Forces Network Europe

American Forces Network's satellite delivery platform is changing, requiring viewers on the European continent who have an AFN decoder and satellite dish in their home to make some changes by July 31 to continue to get AFN TV. "We know this change will inconvenience folks," said AFN Europe Commander Col. Bill Bigelow. "But, we're doing all we can to help viewers make the necessary adjustments. We've set up a toll-free help desk, online manuals, and how-to videos to try and facilitate a smooth transition to the new satellite." The AFN help desk is now being manned through July 31. Hours are Tuesday through Friday from 1-9 p.m. and Saturday from 10 a.m. to 8 p.m. (Central European Time). Viewers from Germany, Italy, Belgium, the UK and most other European countries will be able to call in via a toll-free number, 00800-236-268-3662 (00800-afnantenna). Since the process of setting up a dish and re-adjusting a decoder varies according to decoder model, location and other variables, the help desk and online materials are especially critical. AFN Europe has posted manuals and how-to videos in English, German and Italian at www.afneurope.net. Click on the Eurobird 9A icon for the manuals and videos. Direct-to-home viewers will need to reconfigure their home decoder and realign their satellite dish from the current satellite, Hotbird 6/9 at 13 degrees east, to the new satellite, Eurobird 9A (EB9A) at nine degrees east. The move to the EB9A satellite positions AFN to better serve the audience in the future. If you have questions about whether this satellite change affects you, visit www.afneurope.net or call the AFN help desk.

Commander's Column

Fiscal belt tightening requires community-wide effort

Commentary by Col. Carl D. Bird
USAG Stuttgart commander

As Lt. Gen. Rick Lynch, the Installation Management Command commander, wrote in the last issue of The Citizen, "The Army's budget is smaller than it has been in previous years, and it will get smaller still."

Unfortunately, this new fiscal reality means it is going to be challenging for U.S. Army Garrison Stuttgart to continue to provide the community with all the things that we do.

However, through careful analysis and forethought, our focus will be on doing the right things and doing them better.

First, we must take a hard look at the costs and effectiveness of the programs and services that the garrison provides. Just as a family must do to manage its budget, we will need to ask three questions: Do we really need it? Is it worth the cost? And what are we willing to do without?

Our analysis will include a review of the hundreds of leisure and social events we offer each year with the intent to reduce, replace or eliminate those repetitive events with marginal historical attendance or limited benefit to the community at large.

Col. Bird

I encourage everyone — service members, families and civilians — to take an active role as good stewards of our limited military resources and property.

We're also examining initiatives designed to reduce overhead, duplication and excess. This means we will look to reduce our costs on service contracts.

Energy is a major portion of the overall Army budget, and here in Stuttgart, we're working on finding better ways to use natural resources and reduce our energy costs.

The Directorate of Public Works engineers and planners continue to seek ways to reach a net zero operating environment. In the next several years, we expect to reach net zero waste on Panzer Kaserne, net zero energy at the Stuttgart Army Airfield and net zero water at the Stuttgart Golf Course.

And we're doing more in this arena through the installation of solar voltaic panels, advanced electric meters on building, LED motion sensor lighting in buildings and LED street lights.

But I need your help. Here's what you can do at home and at the office to save energy — and money — right now.

Plug home electronics into power strips; turn the power strips off when the equipment is not in use.

Turn off computers and monitors when not in use. Take short showers instead of baths. Wash only full loads of dishes and clothes. And remember to turn off the lights switch when you leave a room.

This fiscal reality is more than cutting our energy bill, though. We need to instill a culture of savings and restraint throughout the community in every aspect of our operations.

I encourage everyone — service members, families and civilians — to take an active role as good stewards of our limited military resources and property.

Practicing good stewardship does not have to be a monumental task; it can be something simple. For example, on our walks around Patch Barracks, my wife, Hope, and I pick up litter and take it to a dumpster.

Despite the fiscal constraints we are confronted with, be assured that our commitment to you, our service members and families, remains as strong as ever.

USAG Stuttgart will continue to strive to provide a quality of life commensurate with your service.

Volunteers praised for saving community millions in 2010

By Gloria Colon-Buzatu

USAG Stuttgart Public Affairs Office

On May 12, U.S. Army Garrison Stuttgart held its annual Volunteer Recognition Ceremony for a guest list of more than 2,000 volunteers, on Panzer Kaserne.

In 2010, volunteers donated 183,325 hours to events and services beyond the scope of what the garrison would normally provide, enhancing the quality of life for community members on every USAG Stuttgart installation.

During the ceremony, Col. Carl D. Bird, USAG Stuttgart commander, and Jewel Csiszar, garrison Army Community Services director, unveiled a ceremonial check written for $3,822,326.25 — the amount volunteers saved the garrison last year — as the crowd cheered and clapped.

The ceremony is an opportunity for the garrison, the combatant commands and other tenant units to come together and recognize their volunteers, said Laura Jean Davis, ACS volunteer coordinator.

Volunteer awards were presented by Bird and Command Sgt. Maj. Anthony M. Bryant, garrison command sergeant major.

Awards included 100 Presidential Service Awards for 500 or more volunteer hours; five Presidential Call to Service Awards for 4,000 hours or more; 42 Volunteer of Excellence Awards, and seven Volunteer of the Year Awards.

Volunteers tracked their hours throughout the year using the online Volunteer Management Information System, or VMIS. While many awards were given this year, there would be even more if all volunteers tracked their hours, Davis added.

USAG Stuttgart Religious Support Office administrator April Adkins received the Presidential Service Award for her volunteer work in planning religious special events, such as revivals, for the garrison.

I really don't want the recognition. To see people smile ... that's a big deal.

April Adkins

Presidential Service Award recipient

However, her real reward was helping others. "I really don't want the recognition," she said. "To see people smile ... that's a big deal."

Another volunteer, Army Master Sgt. Rodolfo Fuentes, sets a goal of volunteering 400 hours to the community each year.

"There are 365 days a year ... subtract 30 days of leave and one day off a week to spend with family and you still have 285 days to volunteer," Fuentes said. "It's a goal I can achieve."

He also encourages others to set similar goals.

"If you average one and a half hours daily you could easily volunteer 400 hours annually," he said. "Giving up a lunch to help out at the library or post office could help towards this [goal]."

For his commitment to the community, Fuentes received the 2010 Military Volunteer of the Year Award.

The donated work by Fuentes, Adkins and the other 2,000 volunteers in the community enhances the quality of life in U.S. Army Garrison Stuttgart, Bird said at the ceremony.

"I'd like to thank each and every volunteer for giving us a chance to celebrate their great accomplishments," he said. "All of you here have much to be proud of. You share a single drive to serve and improve the community."

"Your hard work and dedication goes a long way in making USAG Stuttgart a great place to live."

Chickenpox cases at CDC

Two confirmed cases of chickenpox have been identified at the Panzer Kaserne Child Development Center.

Chickenpox is a very contagious infection caused by a virus. It is spread from person to person by direct contact or through the air from an infected person's coughing or sneezing. It causes a blister-like rash, itching, tiredness, and fever lasting an average of four to six days.

Vaccines help protect against the spread of the chickenpox virus to others who are susceptible, according to health experts. Therefore, children are being vaccinated according to their specific needs by age.

For more information, visit the Centers for Disease Control website at www.cdc.gov/ncidod/diseases/list_varicel.htm.

E. coli outbreak in Germany

There is currently an outbreak of food borne illness caused by a specific strain of the bacteria Escherichia coli, or EHEC, in Germany. The illness is occurring among civilians in northern Germany. Consuming food or water that has been contaminated with these bacteria can cause bloody diarrhea and abdominal cramps. No cases have been reported in the U.S. military community.

The source of the bacteria is uncertain; however, German health officials have implicated raw vegetables as a potential source. People can become ill after consuming contaminated food that has not been properly prepared or cooked.

Health officials encourage everyone to practice safe food preparation practices, including washing hands frequently and washing fruits and vegetables before eating them.

People who develop diarrhea should practice strict hand hygiene, drink plenty of fluids and monitor their stools for the presence of visible blood. Anyone with bloody diarrhea should seek medical care promptly.

By Capt. Steve Bishop (U.S. Army)

Q: What is a "Living Will" and should I have one?

A: A "Living Will" is a type of Advance Medical Directive (AMD) — a legal document designed to communicate your wishes regarding health care in the event you are unable to make those wishes known in the future due to illness or injury.

In a Living Will, you provide instructions on whether to administer, withhold or withdraw life-sustaining treatment if diagnosed with a terminal or irreversible condition. For example, you may direct that, if in a permanent vegetative state, artificial nutrition be removed so that you may die naturally, but that comfort care be administered to alleviate pain.

A Living Will does not go into effect until: (1) you are no longer capable of making decisions; (2) your attending physician certifies the applicable condition in writing; and (3) your Living Will covers the health care decision required.

The other type of AMD is a Durable Power of Attorney for Health Care, commonly referred to as a Medical Power of Attorney (MPOA). In this instrument, you designate someone to act as your "attorney-in-fact," or agent, to make health care decisions on your behalf. The agent's authority begins if and when (but not until) the attending physician certifies in writing that you lack the competence to make your own decisions. At that point, the agent steps into your shoes and makes all decisions in accordance with your wishes and best interests.

You may grant your agent a broad range of powers, to include the authority to consent to or refuse life-sustaining treatment, or conversely, you may choose to narrowly tailor their authority to act in just a few specific circumstances. Like a Living Will, an MPOA is your document, and you may compose it however you wish, within the bounds of the law.

Advance planning through an AMD has two significant benefits. First, it allows you to exercise control over your life even after losing the ability to directly participate in the decision-making process. And second, it diminishes the anxiety for loved ones by clearly expressing your desires regarding treatment.

It takes just one session with a Judge Advocate to secure a Living Will and/or MPOA precisely drafted to accommodate your wishes. So make an appointment with the Legal Assistance Office today, and let us help you account for one of life's uncertainties.

This column is not intended as individual or specific legal advice. If you have specific issues or concerns, you should consult a judge advocate at 421-4152/civ. 0711-729-4152.

The winners will move on to the 2011 All Army level of competition.

Ten of the 11 pieces of artwork that Patch High sophomore Sara Dunn entered in the Stuttgart Arts and Crafts Contest will progress to the All Army level of competition.

Dunn, 16, entered her work in the categories of ceramics, drawings, mixed media 2-D, mixed media 3-D and water base painting. She garnered first, second and third place in novice ceramics, first and second places in novice mixed media 3-D, first and third places in water base painting, third place in novice mixed media 2-D and two honorable mentions in novice drawings.

"I felt euphoric when I received top honors in all those categories," said Dunn, who plans to pursue a career in art. "I was surprised and extremely honored."

Dunn was among 35 contestants to enter 100 pieces of artwork in this year's U.S. Army Garrison Stuttgart local competition of the 2011 Army Arts and Crafts Contest. Their work was displayed during an exhibition and awards presentation May 18 at the Swabian Special Events Center on Patch Barracks.

Those who placed first, second or third or received an honorable mention in the local contest progress to the All Army level, said Kelly Sarles, Stuttgart Arts and Crafts Director.

Sarles said the annual contest provides local artists the opportunity to showcase their work to the USAG Stuttgart community and encourages budding young artists like Dunn.

"It's a chance to see some good artwork done by family, friends, neighbors and co-workers and for the artists to share their talent and some culture with the community," Sarles said. "It's also a way to encourage young people to progress in art studies — there were some high schoolers and even some elementary students who entered."

Two of the three pieces that contestant Ron Miyashiro entered in the accomplished oil base painting category will progress to the All Army level. Miyashiro's work, "Birth of a Cello," captured first place and his piece, "Resurrection" received honorable mention.

Miyashiro, who said he usually paints with oils or acrylic, said that his first-place piece "Birth of a Cello" was inspired by "the smooth curves of the cello and the female figure."

"The art of music has always inspired me and continues to be a main subject in most of my work," he said. "... I am grateful and lucky to have placed first in my category because there are so many talented and creative people in our small community. The competition is always tough."

While Miyashiro said he feels honored by the recognition, placing in the contest wasn't as important as the "...inspiration, desire and motivation a competition brings."

Sarles echoed his sentiment. "It is great to have the artists together — feeding off each other, motivating each other and sharing experiences with each other."

Stormtroopers, little heroes invade Patch Library

USAG Stuttgart Public Affairs Office

Usually, libraries are known as quiet sanctuaries of classic literature, but on May 21, the library on Patch Barracks decided to shake things up when they hosted Free Comic Book Day.

Created in 2002, Free Comic Book Day is an annual event hosted by comic book stores across North America. Its purpose is to encourage new customers to visit the stores by handing out free comic books.

Thomas Edgar thought that concept would work well for libraries, too.

Edgar, a library technician at the Patch Barracks facility, took the idea and expanded on it. He organized a super hero costume workshop for children, a costume contest and super hero trivia contest. He also invited the 501st Legion, German Garrison, to attend.

The 501st Legion is a fictional military unit from the Star Wars franchise. It's made up of dedicated fans who gather at events and charities wearing authentic-looking costumes from the Star Wars movies. On this day, stormtroopers and imperial pilots wandered through the aisles, signing autographs and posing for photos.

While the members of the 501st gave the front of the library a Death Star ambiance, pint-sized super heroes were busy in the back room making capes and masks, and playing a Star Wars computer game on the big screen. At the costume contest, which was judged by members of the 501st, everyone walked away with a prize.

"I like the stormtroopers," said 5-year-old Evan Quinn, who sported a Batman costume. "I wish I had remembered my Darth Vader costume."

Some people might wonder what comic books have to do with a library, but Edgar says the two go together very well.

"We see people checking out literary classics and graphic novels right alongside each other," he said.

He hopes events like this will draw in members of the community who might not know about the library's other offerings, such as game nights, preschool story time and even a writer's support group.

When asked if he would consider doing this again next year, Edgar replied, "Yes, definitely." Behind him, a four-foot caped crusader left with an armful of books and videos.

USAG Stuttgart Public Affairs Office

Cooking healthy meals at home doesn't have to be a time-consuming chore, according to Amy Haack, teacher of the Army Wellness Center Stuttgart's newest class, "Meals in Minutes."

The class, scheduled to run monthly, is designed to teach time-crunched spouses and parents how to put together nutritious, home-cooked meals in a pinch.

"When I became a mom and went back to work, I realized that if I can make meals in minutes and it works for me ... it can work for other people," said Haack, an Army spouse and the AWC Stuttgart's health educator.

In the first "Meals in Minutes" class held May 25 in the wellness center, Haack discussed how to read food labels in English and German to find healthy processed foods, gave health-smart shopping tips and shared some of her own recipes.

"The big thing for me was making sure people left with recipes and with actual ideas they can use at home," she said.

Haack also introduced a list of nutritious "must-have" items to keep on hand, based on a poll she took of other home cooks, and sent participants away armed with online resources and a meal planning template.

"If you cook, it's important to plan," she said.

She closed out the hour-long class by providing a list of ways class participants can get started, such as trying one new recipe a week, or making and freezing an "emergency" meal in advance.

Class participants had the opportunity to ask questions, such as "Which veggies keep the longest?" and "What can I cook if my husband has high cholesterol?"

Tanya Kerr, an Air Force spouse, said "Meals in Minutes" helped her widen her options for putting meals on the table.

"It definitely gave me new ideas and new ways to look at labels, and called attention to issues I didn't realize were important," she said.

She also left the class with a plan for improving what her family eats. "I'm definitely going to try a couple of recipes they showed, and try to make out a meal plan more regularly," she said.

Haack's hope is that class attendees learn that staying healthy is possible, even with little time.

"What we feed our family and what we feed ourselves is important," she said. "[I hope] people see that it can be affordable, quick and simple, and that it's not that hard."

The Army Wellness Center Stuttgart is located in Building 2337 on Patch Barracks. Hours are Monday through Friday from 7:30 a.m. to 4:30 p.m.

For more information, call 430-2997/4073/civ. 0711-680-2997/4073.

PHS college-bound program best in Europe

The Patch High School Advancement Via Individual Determination program for college-bound students once again earned a top national ranking during its biannual AVID recertification April 25.

"AVID certification takes place every two years and Patch High School was re-certified at a Level 3 school [highest level] which places us as a National Demonstration School. We are currently the only school in DODDS Europe with this rating," said Claire Dickmeyer, Patch High School AVID coordinator.

The AVID program began in 1990 to help bridge the gap for students in the academic middle who are committed to meeting college entrance requirements. In the Stuttgart military community, it is offered as an elective to all students who are making average grades and aspire to go to college.

This year, there are 70 students in the AVID program, with 85 registered for next year, said Dickmeyer, who has been an AVID coordinator for 12 years. "All AVID students graduating [have been] accepted to a university," she added.

The AVID ranking is a high honor for PHS.

"Only 3 percent of 4,500 schools [worldwide] achieve National Demonstration School status," Dickmeyer said. "My students, like the name of the program, are determined to succeed."

The AVID classes are a mixed group of students in grades nine through 12, supported by a staff of student tutors, and tutor assistants. Parents are also part of the AVID family.

Jonas Jones, a PHS senior, started as an AVID student in 2009 to strengthen his organization and leadership skills. Jones had a 3.4 grade point average and attributes his current 4.0-plus GPA to AVID.

"I went from a messy backpack to an organized binder," said Jones, an AVID

On May 19, it was Cultural Day in the AVID classroom, designed to give students the opportunity to educate their peers on the cultures of other countries.

Wayland Owsley and Mardi Adinkrah, both freshmen, studied South Korea. For their presentation, they cooked a stir-fried vegetable dish that gave classmates a taste of the region.

Jacob Abraham, sophomore, and Lane Warchol, senior, gave a presentation on the culture and history of Israel. They shared artifacts and prepared blintzes: thin crepe-style pancakes.

Parent Tamyla Abraham attended Cultural Day and stepped in to support the Israel team by mixing the blintz batter and flipping them. Before moving to Stuttgart, Abraham had never heard of the AVID program before, but is pleased that her children have the benefit of enrolling.

"Education is very important ... and my first thought about AVID is how my children would benefit from learning organizational skills," she said.

Those in other school systems can visit and observe Patch High School's AVID model, now the singular National Demonstration School in Department of Defense Dependents Schools-Europe, something Dickmeyer attributes to the students involved.

"The dedication and desire of the AVID students at Patch High School is unparalleled. The students here are successful as a result of their own determination and their own longing for success in high school, college and eventually, in the professional world," she said.

After bin Laden’s death, is War on Terror over?

By Shay Edwards
USAG Stuttgart Antiterrorism Office

On May 1, President Barack Obama announced to the world that Osama bin Laden had been killed by U.S. forces in Pakistan. Many people worldwide celebrated, some questioned whether celebrating was appropriate, and others prepared for a revenge terrorist attack. Through all these reactions, questions began to arise. Now that Osama bin Laden is dead, does America still need to fear a terrorist attack?

The answer is that terrorism will not go away, so Americans are advised to continue incorporating vigilance into their lifestyle.

There are multiple terrorist groups around the world. Many of these are independent of al-Qaida and are minimally affected by the death of Osama bin Laden, and will continue to plot anti-U.S. attacks. A 2004 Foreign Terrorist Organizations Report for Congress lists 36 major worldwide terrorist groups that pose a threat to the U.S. Additionally, there is the threat of terrorists who are influenced by internet propaganda and conduct attacks independently of any major terrorist group. Examples of this include the March 2, 2011, shooting of U.S. Airmen in Frankfurt, Germany and the November 5, 2009, shooting in Fort Hood, Texas.

In addition, terrorism against the U.S. is not a recent development. The U.S. has been the victim of terrorist attacks multiple times in the 20th century. In 1920, a horse-drawn cart loaded with explosives was detonated in Manhattan, New York, and killed 38 people. From 1940 until 1956, there were 30 bombings throughout New York City, killing 10 people. In 1985, a U.S. Soldier was murdered and his ID card used to move a car bomb onto Rhein-Main Air Base, Germany. When it detonated, two were killed and 20 injured. All of these attacks occurred before the Sept. 11, 2001, attacks, and although they were not as deadly, they are a clear indicator that terrorist activity has been a regular part of American history.

Vigilance is a lifestyle

After a terrorist attack, Americans often band together to provide support for victims and take precautionary measures against more attacks. But after about six months, many seem to assume that there is no longer a threat. Professionals who respond to these incidents work continually to encourage constant vigilance. When

The al-Qaida leader was killed by Navy SEALs during a raid on his compound in Abbottabad, Pakistan. While bin Laden’s death is a significant loss for the terrorist organization al-Qaida, Americans are advised to stay vigilant against anti-U.S. attacks.

Americans maintain their guard, they become better prepared to identify and thwart future attacks through observation and reporting of suspicious activities.

The U.S. Department of State’s worldwide caution issued on January 31, 2011, states that terrorists may potentially attack tourist infrastructure and public transportation systems. Specifically, “large gatherings, travel hubs and tourist hot spots are frequently targeted.” There are four things Americans here in Europe can do before traveling to reduce this risk:

1. Before visiting another country, read about it at the Department of State website, www.travel.state.gov. The site identifies common criminal and terrorist activity in the area, and lists any alerts or warnings to U.S. personnel.
2. Know how to report suspicious activity to local law enforcement. In many countries in the European Union, dialing 112 will simultaneously contact the police, medical, and fire services. Visit www.travel.state.gov for a country’s local police and ambulance service phone numbers, hospital locations, and information on the nearest U.S. embassy or consulate.

3. Maintain a low profile. If possible, avoid eating at restaurants, visiting night clubs, and staying at large hotels frequented by Americans, because large groups of Americans are a natural target for a terrorist attack. Try to wear clothes similar to what the locals are wearing. Lastly, refrain from yelling and talking loudly, as others may be listening to the conversation.

4. Avoid potentially dangerous situations. If something appears strange, such as a cardboard box on a subway train or a backpack lying under a restaurant table, remove yourself from the area as quickly as possible. If someone is acting strangely, or appearing drunk, drugged, or in a trance, discretely move to an exit. Before going on a trip, review antiterrorism awareness training by going to www.at-awareness.org.

Get to know health clinic appointment system

U.S. Army Health Clinic Stuttgart

The U.S. Army Health Clinic Stuttgart offers three types of appointments for eligible community members: acute, routine and emergency appointments.

Knowing the difference between them can help community members understand how the appointment system works and plan accordingly.

Same-day appointments are categorized as “acute” appointments. These appointments have a 24-hour access to care standard, meaning the clinic is obligated to ensure the patient is seen by a health care provider within the allotted time frame.

Acute appointments are limited to medical conditions that are urgent, but are not considered medical emergencies. Examples of “acute” conditions include, but are not limited to:

- Recent unmanageable pain
- Vomiting, nausea, diarrhea

- Respiratory infections (bronchitis, pneumonia, colds, flu)
- Strains or sprains
- Dislocations
- Possible fractures/brakes (definite brakes/fractures need to go to the emergency room)
- Lacerations, abrasions or contusions (bruises).

Appointments for medication refills, physicals and chronic medical conditions are considered “routine” appointments and must be seen within seven days. Appointments for specialty care and follow-ups have a 28-day access to care standard.

Emergency care appointments are allotted for medical conditions that threaten life, limb or eyesight.

To schedule an appointment, call the ERMCCare Call Center at 00800-3762-2273 (toll-free) or DSN 371-2622/civ. 06221-17-2622.

Q fever health advisory

Recently, a member of a U.S. military community in Germany was diagnosed with Q fever, prompting Army health officials to issue a precautionary health advisory.

Q fever is a worldwide disease caused by the bacteria Coxiella burnetii, most commonly passed to humans from sheep, goats and cattle. Infection of humans usually occurs by inhalation from contaminated aerosols. While workers at meat processing plants are at greatest risk, some Soldiers returning from Iraq have been diagnosed.

The most common symptoms among U.S. military personnel have been fever, headache, chills, a generalized feeling of discomfort, illness, or lack of well-being, fatigue and nausea. The disease is treatable, and early diagnosis, made by a blood test, can minimize the risk of more severe complications. Contact your health care provider for more information.

(Information provided by the Europe Regional Medical Command Public Affairs Office.)

‘No-shows’ limit access to health clinic

The Stuttgart military community has lost more than 2,000 medical appointments at the U.S. Army Health Clinic Stuttgart since December 2010 as a result of beneficiaries failing to show for their appointments. This equates to more than $300,000 in lost resources for the clinic.

Canceling an appointment one hour ahead of time allows another beneficiary to use the appointment. To cancel, call the Europe Regional Medical Command Care Call Center toll free at 00800-3762-2273, or DSN 371-2622/civ. 06221-17-2622.

Outdoor Rec takes summer trips to new heights

By Brittany Carlson

USAG Stuttgart Public Affairs Office

U.S. Army Garrison Stuttgart's Outdoor Recreation has a summer program to fit all outdoor enthusiasts' tastes.

"We have something for everybody on our schedule — from single/unaccompanied Soldiers to families with kids. We make it fun and accessible for all," she said.

Stuttgart's Outdoor Rec facility, a part of Family and Morale, Welfare and Recreation, is the only Outdoor Recreation facility in the world that offers paragliding.

Beginners (starting at age 7) can take a tandem flight in the Alps, Black Forest or Italy with Outdoor Rec's own licensed pilot, Steve Van Fleet. Scheduled trips are set for Lago Di Garda, Italy, July 2-5 and the Italian Dolomites June 17-20. Individual flights can be arranged at any time.

Community members can also earn their pilot licenses through a two-week training course.

"I call it the portable airplane flying license because you can pretty much pack your paraglide in a duffel bag and go anywhere in the world," said Bruce Zabukovic, a recreation assistant at Outdoor Rec.

Those who want to learn to fly a little closer to the ground first can book a "snooper" class, in which Van Fleet gives beginners a taste of paragliding at Robinson Barracks.

To schedule a trip, contact Van Fleet at 431-2774/civ. 07031-15-2774, or steve.vanfleet@gmail.com.

Community members who would rather be swimming can check out Outdoor Rec's scuba program, provided through the Kronau Dive Center near Heidelberg. New divers can take a snooper class June 18, or get scuba certified during two weekends of diving July 16-17 and 23-24.

Outdoor Recreation also has a few cultural trips planned. For those who enjoy a relaxing day on the water, they can sign up for the Neckar River run and camping trip on June 17-20, or the Flossfahrt trip on July 30. On the Flossfahrt trip, participants will ride a log raft down the river, accompanied by a German Oompa band.

"The idea of a Flossfahrt trip is to relax and enjoy nature. It is basically a raft with a band on board," Young said. "You just float down the river. It's very traditional."

On overnight trips, Outdoor Rec books hotels, provides transportation, makes connections with local recreation offices, and offers advice on restaurants and activities, Young said.

"We've already been there, done that," she said. "You show up with your bag; that's all the planning you have to do."

There are also several local activities set for the summer, including rifle/hand gun range and trap shooting every other Thursday, and paintball every other Saturday. Upcoming trap dates are June 16 and July 7, and rifle/hand gun dates are June 9 and 30 and July 14 and 28.

Licenses and permits are not required, but participants must be 18 years old.

Paintball play days are set for June 4 and 18 and July 9 and 23, near Panzer Kaserne. Participants must be age 18 or older. All paintball guns used in Germany must be labeled with an "F Stamp" by German authorities, which signifies that it is not a lethal weapon. However, Outdoor Rec has markers and masks for rent, as well as paint for purchase. Call for more information.

Pre-registration is required for most activities. Discounts are available for families and advanced booking.

For more information, including costs, call Outdoor Recreation at 431-2774/civ. 07031-15-2774.

USAG Stuttgart promotes health, fitness by participating in ...

Strong B.A.N.D.S.

The class was one of three events in USAG Stuttgart supporting the Family and Morale, Welfare and Recreation Command “Strong B.A.N.D.S.” promotion for National Sports and Fitness Month in May.

USAG Stuttgart Public Affairs Office

U.S. Army Garrison Stuttgart was one of 59 garrisons world-wide selected to participate in the “Strong B.A.N.D.S.” promotion in support of National Sports and Fitness Month in May.

B.A.N.D.S. stands for balanced lifestyle, actively motivated, nutritional health, determined to excel, and strength and conditioning. The Family and Morale, Welfare and Recreation promotion is designed to energize and inspire community members to live a healthy lifestyle.

Each participating garrison hosted a minimum of three fitness- or health-related events throughout the month. Participants were given Strong B.A.N.D.S. wristbands that symbolize the community’s commitment to a healthier lifestyle.

USAG Stuttgart’s events were the “Bike to Work Week” on Kelley Barracks May 16-20, the Cobblestone Classic run May 21, and a Boot Camp fitness class held at the Panzer Fitness Center May 24.

Bike to Work Week

Kelley Barracks, home to U.S. Africa Command, was the site of this year’s USAG Stuttgart “Bike to Work Week” May 16-20. At the center of the installation, a group of AFRICOM cyclists under the leadership of Mark “Hap” Harlow rallied each day beneath a blue and white canopy adorned with a kaleidoscope of racing jerseys to share their insights on the value of cycling. Daily seminars covered topics such as commuting, safety, maintenance, family cycling and touring Europe.

At the first lunch-time seminar, Harlow told a gathered crowd of the “rainbow” of cycling benefits: “fitness, health, fun, green-power, traffic relief, family recreation, and ... a key to Europe.”

The intent of Bike to Work was to encourage the community to take advantage of the cycling opportunities in Europe and return to the U.S. with a more complete understanding of the benefits of bicycling. However, it was also to have fun, which was made apparent on the final day of the week with a group ride through the surrounding forests to the historic city of Tübingen.

Cobblestone Classic

At Family and MWR’s annual Cobblestone Classic on May 21, 234 community members ran the historic cobblestone tank trail from Patch Barracks to Panzer Kaserne.

The sun was shining as runners made their way over five miles of trail, starting at Husky Field on Patch Barracks and finishing outside of Panzer Kaserne’s main gate.

“It was an exceptionally beautiful day — you couldn’t ask for a more perfect day for a run,” said Ricky Payton, USAG Stuttgart assistant sports and fitness director.

Once on Panzer Kaserne, runners were greeted

“It all starts with a healthy body. We want to inspire our Soldiers and families to make nutrition and physical fitness a priority.”

Darrell Manuel
Army Sports Director, FMWR

with by a large crowd outside the Panzer Mall, where the award ceremony was held.

The top three finishers overall and in the men’s category were Douglas Hutcheson, with a time of 29 minutes, 25.6 seconds, followed by James Davis, 30:25.8, and Jeffrey Maione, 31:13.5. The top finishers in the women’s category were Joy Connell, with a time of 34 minutes, 14.2 seconds, followed by Melissa Nettleingham, 34:51.7, and Kristen Gilbert, 38:05.4.

Boot Camp fitness class

The Boot Camp class, held weekly at the Panzer Fitness Center, is an hour-long total body fitness course taught by Courtney Rife through FMWR Sports and Fitness. On May 24, class participants were divided into groups and rotated to different stations, where they completed exercises from crunches and jumping rope to squats.

Rife said the class was an ideal way to promote the Strong B.A.N.D.S. promotion.

“Living a healthy lifestyle means much more than just exercising. Our country is plagued by so many diseases ... that can almost always be avoided by making good food choices in combination with an effective fitness program,” said Rife, who has been teaching the class for two years.

“The biggest reward for me as an instructor is the positive changes I have seen in so many of the participants and their desire to reach a higher level of fitness than they are used to,” she added.

And after all, being fit is the first step toward resilience, according to Darrell Manuel, Army Sports Director at the Family and MWR Command.

“Resiliency is about more than just emotional, family, or social fitness,” he said. “It all starts with a healthy body. We want to inspire our Soldiers and families to make nutrition and physical fitness a priority.”

Terrorist Planning Cycle

The conspirators of the Fort Dix plot chose five military installations and one military event across three states before finally selecting Fort Dix as the location to attack.

One of the conspirators was a pizza delivery person who used his access to the installation as a means of obtaining maps and locating large concentrations of Soldiers and critical facilities on Fort Dix.

The conspirators worked to obtain a large amount of weapons both through legal and illegal means.

The conspirators trained with weapons numerous times at remote outdoor ranges in Pennsylvania while also rehearsing actions on the objective through the use of paintball weapons close to their residence.

Terrorists' plans aren't usually uncovered in neat bullet points; such plans are usually foiled by someone seeing—then reporting—one suspicious detail. Like the one that Circuit City employee Brian Morgenstern saw in a video the suspects described above gave him. After Brian saw “stuff on the film that was disturbing,” he called Mount Laurel, NJ police, who quickly involved the FBI. Brian's actions illustrate how proactive awareness can uncover prospective terrorists and their methods. Antiterrorism is principally defensive, but any vigilance on your part—that's going on the offensive.

Marines may be "first in fight," but they're also first in golf. And second. And third.

Teams representing Marine Forces Europe and Marine Forces Africa swept the 2011 U.S. Army Garrison Stuttgart Commander's Cup Golf Tournament held May 20 at the Stuttgart Golf Course, taking the top three positions while solidly destroying Special Forces Command Europe's two-year grip on the trophy.

For first-place team member Gary Liddell, taking possession of the trophy has been something he's thought about for a long time.

"We've been chasing it for three years," he said.

But for many of the golfers, participation had more to do with camaraderie than conquest.

"It's great to get the opportunity to get out and play — especially to bring the garrison and EUCOM together.

"The golf course is a great equalizer. There's no rank ... out there," said U.S. European Command's Michael Ritchie.

The tournament is designed to promote esprit de corps between the units and services.

"It gets people away from the workplace and builds team spirit," said tournament director and golf course manager Gary Groff.

"The weather was great, prizes were good, the food was super, and everyone had a good time," he added.

Even those who hadn't swung a club in at least 17 years.

"The last time I played golf, there was a division at Fort Ord, California," said Carl Bird, the USAG Stuttgart garrison commander.

But being rusty didn't dissuade him from playing. "When the weather's like this, and everybody's smiling, what could be better?" he said.
